Danzig Crisis Worries Nations of Europe

WAR-WORRIED Europe shifted its anxiety from the Italian-Ethiopian sanctions problem to the newer and baffling question of what to do about the Free City of Danzig now seeking to free itself from the bonds of the League of Nations.

The league disposed of the sanctions problem by voting to abolish them, thus to all practical intents and purposes removing Ethiopia from the list of foreign states. Appearing personally before the league assembly, the refugee emperor, Haile Selassie, made a last moving bid for Ethiopia's freedom.

The "king of kings" denounced France and Great Britain without mentioning their names. He generally expressed desire to reform the league, but he was not the league's covenant itself, but a lack of international morality. The league was voted a loan of $50,000,000 to international morality. The league was voted a loan of $50,000,000 to international morality.

Observers were of the opinion that the league was acting under orders from Chancellor Hitler, in view of Germany's expansionist program and its rearmament, they feel that Danzig will be the next Nazi objective now that the Rhineland is remilitarized. By the elimination of Communism in the east, the international affairs of the city, it is believed the Nazi would be in a position to crush the opposition party and pave the way for annexation of Danzig by Germany. In the event of a Nazi push on Danzig, it was believed that Britain and France would co-operate in opposing it.

July 4th Celebrations

A TOLL of 346 lives was exacted by the celebration of the Fourth of July throughout the United States.

Booming cannon crackers played a comparatively innocent part in the slaughter, for only 11 lives were lost in accidents due to fireworks. But if the nation heeded warnings about the danger of fireworks, it forgot the menace of mobbing as a citizens, for 208 people in 36 states were killed as the result of acts on streets and highways. Ninety persons were dragged in 36 states. Miscellaneous tragedies accounted for 37 additional fatalities in 15 states.

Not since 1931 has the celebration of America's patriotic holiday claimed so many victims. In that year the death toll from accidents reached 483.

Roosevelt and Landon Return to Their Desks

THE Presidential candidates of both the Democratic and the Republican parties returned to their respective cabinets after a three-day absence. President Roosevelt came back to Washington after a three-day pilgrimage to Virginia. The dedication of the Shenandoah National Park, Fourth of July address from the porch of Thomas Jefferson's home at Monticello and his visit to Williamsburg, capital of the Old Dominion from 1699 to 1776, in his address at Jefferson's home, the President called on the nation to recognize the "sacred fire" of "true freedom" which had lighted the "golden age" of American history. He declared the present emergency required the present leadership as displayed by the founder of the Democratic party.

Gov. Alf M. Landon returned to Topeka, Kan., after a vacation to the Adirondack mountains, for the convening of the state legislature and for the acceptance speech at the Republican national convention, Kansas legislature began its session July 23. National significance attached to the meeting of the Kansas legislature because of the fact that it would have to deal with the old-age pension, unemployment insurance and general social welfare legislation and that an amendment to the state constitution was in prospect. Discussions of the farm problem and conferences with Governor Landon's political advisers were on the program. The Republican standard bearer was not expected to return to Colorado until after the notification ceremonies.

In the meantime, great activity was apparent in opposing campaign headquarters. President Roosevelt summoned Democratic National Chairman James A. Farley to Washington for a conference on the political campaign. It was expected that the question of Mr. Farley's retirement from the cabinet about which there has been considerable rumor, would be decided. The Democrats have established national headquarters at the Baltimore hotel in New York and it is from there Chairman Farley will direct the campaign.

John A. McCarty, chairman of the Republican party, opened national headquarters at the Ritz Hotel in New York. He addressed 2,800 banqueters at a dinner in his honor and declared that the Republican party was not disheartened by the Cleveland convention. Since the Democrats had offered the Republican the "sincere flattery of imitation," he said.

Pope Pius Orders World Censorship of Movies

A WORLD censorship on movies was ordered by Pope Pius XI, in an encyclical letter addressed directly to the bishops and archbishops of the world. The encyclical, which was issued on July 3, 1936, is the first of its kind since the papal bull of 1930, which ordered the censorship of movies.

Recovery of Business Holds in First Half

CONTINUING business recovery during the first six months of 1936 fulfilled the hopes of optimistic prognosticators and surpassed the expectations of conservative forecasters.

All the leading trade barometers registered fair business weather at the close of the first half of the year. The production of automobiles reached 2,400,000 units in the first six months of 1936, the best for the period since 1929.

Improvement was further reflected by the steel industry, the operations of which rose from 49.2 per cent of capacity at the start of the year to 71.2 per cent at the end of June. The output of electricity climbed steadily to reach an all-time peak in June.

The steady recovery of the railroad was indicated by carloadings which worked up to approach their best levels since 1931. The figures for the first six months of 1936 were substantially better than those for the same period of 1935. A strong upsurge of home building gave impetus to the construction industry although it still remained at subnormal levels.

Another barometer of improved conditions was the stock market, which extended the gains it made in 1935 and reached a new high ground it has held since 1931.

Walker an Bartell Have Own Opinions of Squawks, Hexes

IT IS long past midnight at the sign of the Toy Bulldog. The boys who have been cutting up all touches get around to the two subjects of squawks and hexes. Since this is a private party, the debate is loud and long. Mickey Walker, who has been listening quietly, now grins and saunters over to the table.

"Maybe there's a time and place for everything," suggests the aquiline nose of the Toy Bulldog. "For instance, if you want to ask anything of a girl, you should ask her in a quiet place, not in a public place, like a bar, where you can hear her every word."
